The images, which are on display at the Museum of Modern Art in New York City, feature Trump in various poses and settings, from the Oval Office to the White House lawn. In one image, Trump is depicted as a giant, looming over the Washington Monument. In another, he is shown as a tiny figure, dwarfed by the White House. The images are often jarring and disorienting, reflecting the surreal nature of Trump's presidency thus far.

Smith says that he was inspired to create the series after seeing Trump's inauguration. "I was struck by how surreal the whole event was," he says.

"It was like something out of a dream. I wanted to create a series of images that would capture that feeling."

The images have been praised by critics for their creativity and originality. "Smith has created a powerful and thought-provoking series of images that offer a unique perspective on Trump's presidency," says New York Times art critic Roberta Smith. "The images are both beautiful and disturbing, and they force us to confront the surreal nature of our current political climate."

The images have also been controversial, with some critics accusing Smith of being biased against Trump. Smith denies this, saying that he is simply trying to portray the president as he sees him. "I'm not trying to make a political statement," he says. "I'm just trying to capture the essence of this moment in time."

Whether you love them or hate them, there is no denying that Smith's images are a powerful and thought-provoking contribution to the ongoing conversation about Trump's presidency. They are a reminder that the surreal nature of our current political climate is not just a matter of perception, but a reality that we must all confront.
