The Constitution of the United States is the supreme law of the land. It establishes the framework for the federal government and guarantees the rights of all Americans. The Constitution was written in 1787 and has been amended 27 times since then.

The Structure of the Constitution

The Constitution is divided into seven articles. The first three articles establish the three branches of the federal government: the legislative branch, the executive branch, and the judicial branch. The fourth article deals with the relationship between the states and the federal government. The fifth article establishes the process for amending the Constitution. The sixth article declares that the Constitution is the supreme law of the land. The seventh article establishes the process for ratifying the Constitution.

The Bill of Rights

The first ten amendments to the Constitution are known as the Bill of Rights. The Bill of Rights guarantees certain fundamental rights and freedoms to all Americans. These rights include the right to freedom of speech, the right to bear arms, and the right to due process of law.

The Constitution and the States

The Constitution establishes a federal system of government. This means that power is divided between the federal government and the states. The federal government has certain powers that are not granted to the states, such as the power to declare war and to regulate interstate commerce. The states have all other powers not granted to the federal government.

The Constitution and the Courts

The Constitution is the supreme law of the land, and the courts are responsible for interpreting and enforcing the Constitution. The Supreme Court is the highest court in the United States. It has the power to review decisions made by lower courts and to declare laws unconstitutional.

The Constitution and the People

The Constitution is the foundation of American democracy. It guarantees the rights of all Americans and establishes the framework for the federal government. The Constitution is a living document that has been interpreted and amended to meet the changing needs of the country.

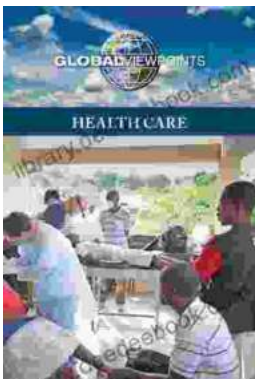

The Constitution of the United States is a remarkable document that has stood the test of time. It is the foundation of American democracy and the guarantor of the rights of all Americans.
